Course Objectives

Processes like immigration and assimilation and institutions like family, church, schools, political parties, the free market, and the media have firmly welded a “nation” like no other. At the same time, social conflict rooted in racial and ethnic prejudice can still only be resolved through federal intervention. The welfare state has grown in size and scope, taking up responsibilities and creating entitlements as never before. Immigrants, for the first time, have refused to learn English, forcing many states to declare English their official language through popular initiatives.

As Americans debate who they are and what it means to be an American, the United States continues to attract millions to its shores. Global terrorism has reopened the question as to who was welcome to America and who was not.

It would be the aim of this course to explore how Americans of all hues, native and immigrant, rich and poor, White and colored, Protestant and Catholic, Asian and Latino, liberal and conservative, Democrat and Republican, and straight and gay, plan and work to achieve their share of the American Dream.

Learning Outcomes

This course:

1. Intends to introduce students to American society and inculcate in them an understanding of the various factors that helped shape it over time;
2. provides students with a wide choice of topics to work on for a doctoral degree in United States Studies;
